

PUBLIC SERVICE & POLICY MAJOR

Public Service and Policy is an interdisciplinary major designed to bring students to a deeper understanding of their roles in public service, the creation and implementation of public policy, and civic health. Learning is organized around three broad outcomes including understanding the context in which policy is created and implemented; cultivating a methodological toolkit that brings diverse evidence into public service and policymaking; and expanding communication, management, and leadership skills for public service impact. By understanding challenges and being well versed in the development of multiple, useful, and realistic solutions, graduates will contribute to the development of local, national, and global communities.

Suggested First- and Second- Year Courses

Composition or writing, economics, leadership, political science, public policy, regional studies, sociology, statistics, and courses that cover the areas of inquiry.

Learning Outcomes

Graduates of the Public Service and Policy major will have developed skills in policy systems analysis, communication, ethical decision-making, and leadership. By understanding the challenges and being well versed in the development of multiple, useful, and realistic solutions, graduates will contribute to the development of local, national, and global networks by making policy and implementing solutions.

They will be equipped to address challenges and contribute to local, national, and global policy networks. Career paths include public service across various government levels, roles in not-for-profit organizations, and business positions utilizing their policy knowledge. Additionally, graduates will be prepared for further studies in law, public health, public policy, and social sciences.

The major matches the purpose of the Evans School to inspire public service and democratize public policy.
